MENTORSHIP

*Mentor for multiple undergraduate students from San Diego State University and the University of California, San Diego, who have participated in many aspects of research listed below.

*Mentor for 6 MA students completing public health, social work, and marriage and family therapy training. Four students from the University of San Diego participated in coding of more than 1000 videotapes of therapy sessions delivered in public mental health settings in San Diego County, contributing to an unparalleled data set describing mental health treatment in community-based outpatient care settings for children and families.

*Internal mentor with respect to management and analysis of research data at Rady Children's Hospital for multiple staff, across multiple projects, at the Child and Adolescent Services Research Center (CASRC). Trained at least 5 database managers, provided ongoing supervision of 2-3 MA level data analysts, and supported conceptualization and implementation of analyses with numerous investigators at CASRC.

SOFTWARE AND MEASUREMENT PRODUCTS

Interrogative™ 2.0. (1998). A complete software suite for developing advanced, stand-alone computer-assisted interviews and surveys. M. S. Hurlburt, developer.

Observational Coding System (2004). Software for conducting observational coding of therapeutic process. Implements the Child Therapy Process Rating System (CTPRS), but also implements numerous other observational process coding frameworks. Applicable to both research and applied problems, including therapist training and supervision. M. S. Hurlburt, developer.

Child Therapy Process Rating System (2004). A coding framework used to quantify the methods that therapists use and objectives they pursue during child/family therapy sessions, particularly geared toward treatment of children with disruptive behavior problems. The coding framework consists of a set of codes with definitions and exemplars, as well as a process for coding therapy sessions. The codes can be used observationally or in a checklist form completed by therapists. M. S. Hurlburt, developer.
